Bristol Bay, Alaska, is home to the largest sockeye salmon run on Earth.

It sustains a $2.2 billion annual fishery, 15,000 American jobs, and the Indigenous peoples who have thrived here for millennia.

PEBBLE MINE WOULD DESTROY IT ALL

If built, Pebble Mine will cause irreparable damage to the Bristol Bay watershed, destroy the fishery, and devastate the world’s last intact salmon-based cultures.

Led by Bristol Bay Tribes and communities, a bipartisan coalition representing millions of Americans stands in opposition to this project, including commercial and sport fishermen, conservationists and environmentalists, national corporations, and local businesses.

Yet Pebble Mine continues to threaten Bristol Bay.

More than 270 businesses and organizations are calling on EPA to provide lasting protections for the people, culture, and economy of Bristol Bay.

IT’S TIME FOR EPA TO ACT
