

66 MILLION REASONS TO VETO PEBBLE MINE

Last year, Bristol Bay, Alaska, saw the return of a record-breaking 66+ million wild sockeye salmon. These fish fed Americans from coast to coast, buoyed a $2.2 billion fishery, and provided for Indigenous communities who have called this region home since time immemorial.

But despite this fishery's importance, it continues to live under the threat of Pebble Mine. EPA has the power to provide immediate protections for this critical watershed and kill Pebble Mine for good by this summer's fishing season.

AN EPA VETO FINISHES THE JOB
